

The National Athletic Trainers' Association (NATA) is proud to honor certified athletic trainers (ATCs) during March 2005—National Athletic Training Month. ATCs are the medical experts who help prevent, assess, treat and rehabilitate injuries that result from physical activity.

Participating in athletics is good for you, but it can also result in injury. National Athletic Training Month was established to advise active people on how to prevent injuries at work and at play.

This year's theme is Rehabilitation: Accelerated Return to Activity. For more information about certified athletic training, visit: www.NATA.org.

Trainers' Association

Certified athletic trainers (ATCs) are unique health care providers. ATCs can be found in a variety of work settings, including secondary schools, colleges and universities, professional sports, sports medicine clinics, hospitals and physicians' offices, the military, occupational workplaces, performing arts and youth sports and recreation. The National Athletic Trainers' Association represents and supports the more than 30,000 members of the athletic training profession through education and research.
